The Problem of Food Waste

Food waste is a major problem in global cities. In the United States, for example, an estimated 40% of all food produced is wasted. This amounts to about 200 billion pounds of food per year, or enough to feed 25 million people.

Food waste occurs at every stage of the food system, from production to consumption. Food can be wasted on farms, during transportation, in grocery stores, and in restaurants. Consumers also waste a significant amount of food at home.

There are many reasons why food is wasted. Some food is wasted because it is not harvested or sold due to its appearance. Other food is wasted because it is not stored properly or because it is not eaten before it goes bad.

The Work of Food Not Bombs

Food Not Bombs is working to end food waste and hunger by collecting surplus food and distributing it to people in need. Food Not Bombs chapters exist in over 100 cities around the world.

Food Not Bombs volunteers collect food from a variety of sources, including grocery stores, restaurants, and farmers markets. They also collect food from individuals who have extra food to share.

Food Not Bombs volunteers then distribute the food to people in need, including the homeless, the hungry, and the working poor. Food Not Bombs also provides food to soup kitchens, shelters, and other organizations that serve people in need.

The Impact of Food Not Bombs

Food Not Bombs is making a significant impact in the fight against hunger and food waste. In 2019, Food Not Bombs chapters around the world distributed over 100 million pounds of food to people in need.

In addition to providing food to people in need, Food Not Bombs is also raising awareness about the problem of food waste. Food Not Bombs volunteers often speak to the media and to community groups about the importance of reducing food waste.

How You Can Help

There are many ways that you can help Food Not Bombs in the fight against hunger and food waste. You can:
