A New Beginning

The first Cubans arrived in Union City in the early 1900s. They were fleeing the political and economic turmoil in their homeland. The Cubans who came to Union City were mostly working-class people. They found work in the factories and mills of Union City, and they quickly established a community of their own.

The early years were difficult for the Cubans in Union City. They faced discrimination from the larger community, and they often had to work long hours for low pay. But the Cubans were determined to make a new life for themselves in the United States. They worked hard, they saved their money, and they eventually began to build their own businesses and homes.

A Thriving Community

By the mid-20th century, the Cuban community in Union City had become a thriving community. The Cubans had established their own churches, schools, and businesses. They had also become active in the political life of Union City. In 1962, the first Cuban-born mayor of Union City was elected.

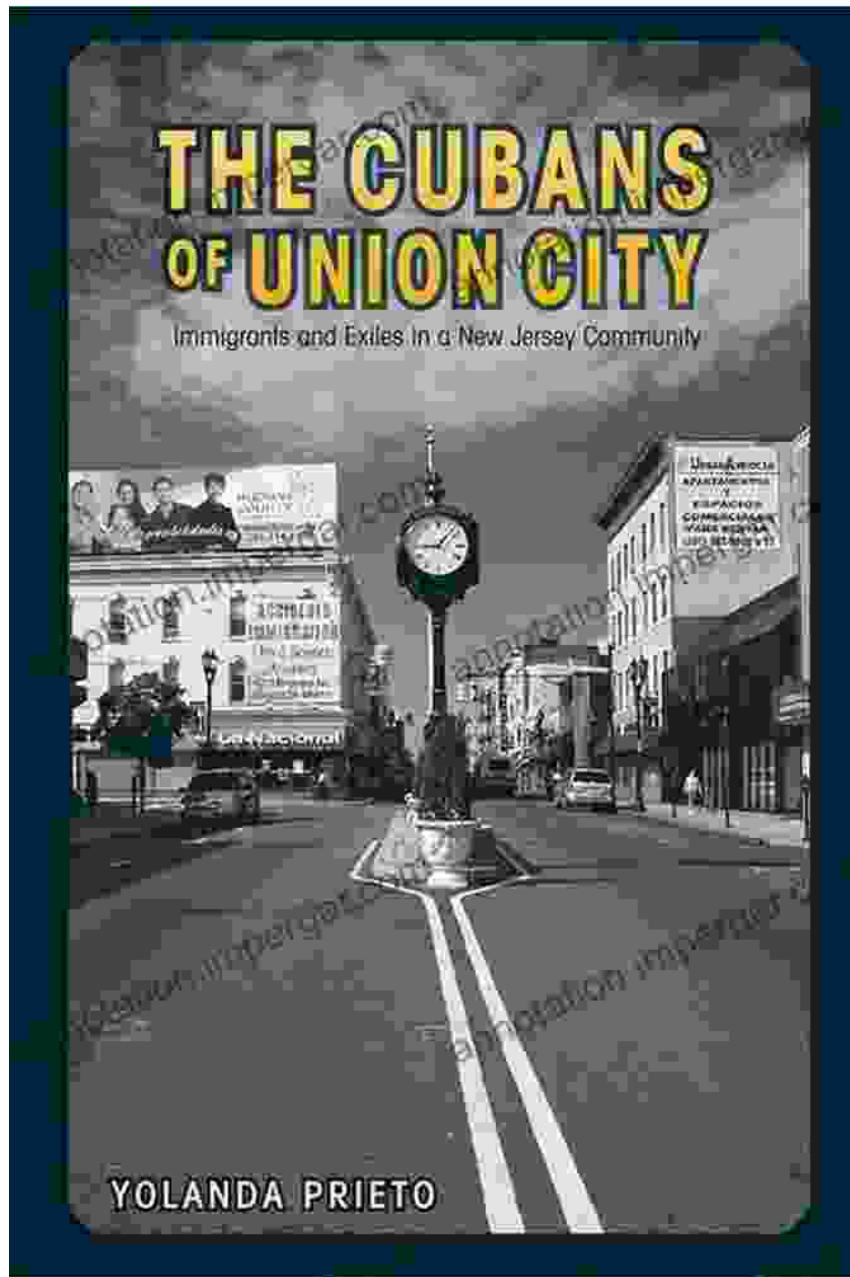

The Cuban community in Union City has continued to grow and prosper in the years since. Today, the Cubans are an integral part of the Union City community. They have made significant contributions to the city's economy, culture, and politics.
