Doe begins by arguing that art is essential for human flourishing. Art helps us to make sense of our experiences, to express our emotions, and to connect with others. It can also be a source of solace and inspiration in times of trouble.

Doe then explores the specific role that artists can play in troubled times. She argues that artists can help us to:

- Understand our world: Art can help us to see the world in new ways, to understand complex issues, and to make sense of our own experiences.
- Cope with adversity: Art can help us to process our emotions, to cope with trauma, and to find hope in the midst of darkness.
- Build a better future: Art can inspire us to imagine a better world, to work for social change, and to create a more just and equitable society.

Doe concludes by arguing that art is more important than ever in troubled times. She urges us to support artists and to create spaces where art can flourish. By ng so, we can help to build a more just, equitable, and sustainable world.
